In the chart that follows, CLASP and the National Partnership for Women & Families catalogue new and expanded paid leave policies announced by large companies in the past two years. Despite private sector momentum, just 14 percent of workers have access to paid family leave through their employers; less than 40 percent have personal medical leave through an employer-provided, short-term disability program. More private sector and public policy changes are needed to ensure everyone has access to essential paid family and medical leave, no matter where they live or work or what job they hold.

This document relies on company news releases or documentation except where alternative sources are cited. The chart includes companies that have adopted or expanded paid parental, family, or medical leave policies that apply to workers regardless of gender. This reflects our organizations’ belief in gender neutrality as a core principle underlying any effective leave policy.
